

ABSTRACT

A method for making a substrate for a mirror used in photolithography is described. That method comprises forming a crystalline layer on a first layer, which has a low coefficient of thermal expansion. Part of the crystalline layer is 5 then removed to form on the first layer a second layer that has a high quality surface finish.

10360 3264363